NATURAL FEATURES, ANTIQUITIES,
HISTORIC ASSOCIATIONS, ETC.BARONY OF blanwilliamTOWN OR VILLAGES Lattin & bullen PARISH Lattin & bullen COUNTY Lifford

TOPOGRAPHY

Brief description of outstanding scenic views in the district, natural attractions, or unusual topographical features.

The united parishes of Lattin & bullen take in a strip of country about 4 miles wide extending north from the western portion of the Slieveannagh range to the hinrich border near the village of Cola. The hills of Shonnell, Lattin, Longstone and bullen all provide remarkably fine views of the surrounding countryside, the most noteworthy being that from the hill of bullen. The following is an attempt to convey what this truly magnificent panorama is like.

GEOLOGY

(See Sheet I)

Brief notes on unusual geological features, such as caves, eskers, etc.

Limestone rock which in parts, such as at Shonnell, is very near the surface, and in other places such as Lattin & bullen is underneath large layers of gravel. Land is heavy, and suitable mostly for pastures, cattle being taken off it fat and 'finished'.

MANSIONS, CASTLES AND ESTATES
OF IMPOSING CHARACTERLocation and brief description. Owner. Past associations. Libraries or art collections?
Gardens? Open to visitors? Admission charge?Mooreport Lattin

Half a mile to the south of Lattin is the demesne of Captain Charles O'Hara-Moore, comprising 450 acres, of pasture land, & woodland, ornamental park-land and gardens. The residence is a strongly built plain but homelike. 2 Storey house of the Georgian times. At the rear there is a fine foreman's and stud-farm. ~~Neary is the~~ ~~remains of an old Celtic fort of the one-ring type.~~
Visitors are allowed through grounds, but not into house. There are no associations worthy of note.

ANTIQUITIES

Abbeys, Castles, Fortresses, Round Towers, Early Churches, Sculptured Crosses, Stone Circles, Ogham Stones, Cairns, Souterrams, Pillar Stones, Cromlechs, Forts, Raths, Mounds, Tumuli or ancient monuments of any kind. Exact location of each with short description, noting condition, etc. Relate local legend or tradition associated with building or object. State if in charge of Office of Public Works. Right of way to public? Admission charge (if any). Name and address of caretaker, or where key is kept.

Longstone Pillarstone

This pillarstone stands prominently on a hill known locally as Longstone about 1 mile SE of Bullen. It is a rough boulder about 8 ft high, and has no markings (see photo). It is ^{erected} in the centre of a 2 ringed fort of large size. ~~I observed the fosse separating the inner from the outer earthenwork is unusually wide about 25 ft. The surface of the inner ring is uneven and inclining up towards the pillarstone. It seems like a site that would have underground chambers. But no trace of O.P.W. No right of way. But visitors may inspect.~~

The 'Mote' Bullen.

This is situated just off the left-hand side of the ^{MONARD} road adjacent to Bullen. It consists of a circular fort about 30 yds across in diameter. There are no traces of any other earth or stone work. But no trace of O.P.W. No right of way. But visitors may inspect. (see photographs)

St. Brins. Lattin

Situation: - about 2 1/2 miles S.E. of Lattin. Off a bye road that leads south from the main Ypporany - Gelbally road at Knockordan Cross. This consists of a circular mote-type mound erected on the summit of a hill. Both the hill & mound have been planted and a good portion of the west side has been removed for use as gravel. On the summit of the mound is built a small house called "the tower", which is now in ruins.

Seymour in his "Stories of Early" states that St. Brins was the residence of the local chieftain, and mentions that it was visited by St. Bolman, Mac Gaidchada from Doon and St. Brendan of Ardfeart the latter of whom, on the plea of his hosts is said to have banished fleas which at that time infested the place.

St Brins is mentioned as being a possession of (see 1 entry)

Topography contd.

To the south the Galtees are seen at their best. They rise rugged and almost sheer in bold, dark-blue outlines of lordly grandeur, terraced by the dark-green Slievenamuck hills which now ^{appear} as foothills underneath. The contrast of colour is something for the artist's brush rather than the eye.

Northwards the rich grass lands of Limerick stretch away in undulating waves, to merge, lost in the hazy distance, with the west Limerick and North Kerry hills. ^{can be} observed the silver glittering life of the Shannon below Limerick, and beyond in the dim distance the hills of Blower.

South to the north a beautiful country of variegated patchwork slopes gently up to the mass of hills known as the Slievephelim mountains.

While to the north-east and east the Doonbeg and Slieveadagh and Slievenamara mountains rise as a background of in blue. To the green sunny fields of Tiffanny.

Having feasted on such a sight we cannot help saying with Eve Mary Kelly "is where you would see more beauty than is on all Irish ground."

Antiquities contd. Mount Brevis.

The De Burgo's (Glynny, South of the Galtees).

In the early 18th century the hill and surrounding land became the property of one Joseph Dames a moneylender from Lyme Dorsetshire England, who built the plain but commodious 3 story residence now to be seen alongside the hill. Dames was a very wealthy man being at that amongst the richest if not actually the richest man in the British Isles. To denote a rich person the term "as Dames" is still commonly used locally. According to local tradition Dames is said to have been a hermaphrodite and that on that account his wife decided to leave him. He frustrated (over) her attempt and had the house or tower on the hill or country built specially to confine her. It is said that she died in it. (not photographed)

Antiquities, Cont'd Mt Brui.

Decorated Stone Mt Brui.

Just beside the front entrance to Mrs Russell's (the present owner) house is a piece of ~~stone~~ stone with decoration carved on it. It was taken from the adjacent churchyard, where it must have been part an archway. See photograph for the design of the decoration which I think is of a comparatively late period. ~~There is no doubt the same is found of this country.~~

Not in case of O.R.V.

No right of way but visitors may inspect.

Historic Sites Cont "The Ventures"

he reconnoitred the enemy's march train at Ballysheehy about a mile or so further on. On completing his observation he is supposed to have said "He will venture". Thus giving the name mentioned above.

The Battle of Ballycohey.

This took ^{place} on the 14th August 1868 as a result of an attempted eviction. The actual site is the farmhouse of Mr Dwyer Ballycohey (see photo) son of one of the participants. The landlord was Mr Wm Scully of Ballinacloy a man of ungovernable temper who knew no fear. Scully had a fine estate at Ballinacloy, and also made a large fortune in America during the Civil War. He had had ^{trouble} with the law on two previous occasions. One in 1849 when he was tried at the Criminal Assizes for the shooting of two sons of a tenant named Beggin whom he was evicting at Ballinacloy. He was acquitted the other at the Criminal Assizes of 1865 when he was convicted of wounding the wife of a tenant named Yehann while attempting to break into the house at night to make a seizure, and was sentenced to 12 months hard labour. On taking over Ballycoher Scully desired to clear ^{it} of tenants and convert it into a grazing ranch. The tenants were accordingly offered an iniquitous form of lease, under which they would be obliged to quit, without compensation even for standing crops, on getting 21 days notice. Refusal to accept these terms meant immediate eviction. The tenants refused to sign and Scully got ejectment processes, which had to be served on the tenant personally or left at his house with a member of his family. The tenants made no secret of their determination to resist these "death-notices" and the police warned Scully that his attempt to serve them would lead to bloodshed. Scully was adamant however, and on Aug 11 1868 he set forth with a police-escort and his own bailiffs to serve the notices. The tenants' houses were found deserted; the party was surrounded by an angry turbulent crowd, and had difficulty in getting back safely to Tipperary. On August 14 he made another attempt but was opposed by the same hostile crowd. The police pointed out the madness of persevering, and Scully reluctantly agreed to make for the protection of the nearest railway station. But passing close to the house of Patrick O'Dwyer he decided to serve the notice there. What happened next is here told in the following quotation from A. M. Sullivan's New Ireland.
(Cont'd Sheet 3)

"Mr Scully, Gorman, a bailiff named Maher and sub-constable Morrow dashed to the hall-door opened it and entered. At that instant from within the house and without the crash of pistol and musket-shot was heard in regular volley. Morrow fell outside the door, shot from a loophole in one of the flanking buildings. Gorman fell over."

just inside the threshold riddled with bullets fired from a loft within which commanded the entrance. MacScully and Maher, both wounded, the former with two bullets lodged in his neck, and badly hurt from several others, rushed from the house and sheltered behind the pier of the yard gateway. Here halting, MacScully, with his double-barrelled breech-loader and a revolver, commenced a brisk fire at the windows and loopholes, the police also pouring in a sharp rifle-fire. At length MacScully called out "Who will enter the house with me?" "I will" said Head Constable Bleary and the whole force rushed in. "They are in the loft" said MacScully and at the words a shot rang from the spot indicated struck Constable Callerton. The step-ladder to the loft had been taken up and it was only with difficulty Bleary could mount to the place. When he succeeded, lo! it was empty. He found a breastwork made with feather-beds, and behind it a revolver and some cartridges. Further search revealed a hole in the edge of the roof, recently made, through which the firing party had retreated to the garden at the rear. But as each house or barn had a rear exit through which retreat had been secured, no one was captured.

They now turned their attention to the wounded. Morrow was quite dead. Gorman was alive but senseless. He never spoke again. All the rest could walk though bleeding severely. MacScully, I have reason to believe, wore a chain of mail under his clothes - a precaution which saved his life. He was made a target when they found he did not fall though hit by a dozen bullets in the body; & they poured their fire at his head, six shots taking nothing effect.

The tragedy was over. MacScully made his escape leaving the police to look after the dead & wounded. The conspirators escaped to America. No clue was forthcoming. Public sympathy was with them. [cont'd 5]

Battle of Ballycohey contd.

His brother landlords passed a resolution reprobating Scully's action towards his tenants, and the Jury at the inquest ~~and~~ also added a note deprecating it and suggested that the Government should enact measures to prevent such proceedings. Nevertheless Scully was still determined to enforce his legal rights and evict Sean, woman, and child from Ballycohey. But the news of the 'Battle of Ballycohey' spread even outside Ireland. Public sentiment was aroused to the evils of the law that gave such power to such ruthless tyrants as Scully. As a result it is said that Scully was refused the necessary military and police protection to effect his design.

The immediate problem of Ballycohey was solved by the public-spirited action of Mrs. Charles Moore, of Moorefort, M.P. for Lifford and a good landlord, in coming forward and buying the property from Scully at his own price. The big problem of supersession of the laws ~~did not~~ was not solved for some time, the first step being taken by Gladstone's Land Act of 1870. Ballycohey was the argument used to get the British Government to move. It helped to start a great movement for the tenant farmers of Ireland, which ended in complete victory.

Burial places continuedFenian Monument in Cullen Graveyard.

In this graveyard stands a tall Celtic cross erected to the memory of James Dillon of Cullen, Simon Dwan, Daniel Ryan, James Kearney Ryan, & Timothy Nihill.

The monument is simple and unornamented.

The inscription reads:—

"To the memory of James Dillon of Cullen whose remains lie beneath this stone, and his fellow patriots whose names are inscribed on the sides. This monument has been erected by the Nationalists of this district to mark their admiration for these Fenian men and the principles for which they suffered and opened their lives. Arrested in 1866, Dillon underwent a long term of torture in an English Dungeon and died in 1883 soon after his liberation. The others went into exile where on the shores of foreign lands their weary bones they rest."

The exact site or house of his birth is not known. One of the leading 18th cent Gaelic poets, he was for the most of his time a homeless wanderer living on ~~the~~ charity. His few poems are deservedly popular but he is chiefly remembered by his "Clíodhna na Caeleage" "Carthin na hAghachain, & hAidh-ghuth an doibhne."

He is said to be buried in Lattin graveyard, but the grave is not known.
