(There are two large monuments, the latin inscription on which are extremely difficult to read. The latin, copied to the best of compilers ability, is followed by a translation copied from Gleeson's History of the Ely O Carroll Territory.)

200. Hic jacet antiquae stirpis, fulgore coruscans, justitia, hospitio vir pietate fide. Hae tamen haud fatis potuere resistere. Ultima vivendi limina cuivis sua. Hoc tamen hae dotes potuere perennis ut ei sit victoria solo et ipe in polo. Patricus Kerin fabricat.

(Contd)

Here lies a man of ancient lineage, brilliantly distinguished for justice, hospitality, piety and faith. Those qualities, however, could not resist the fates. To each person the limits of life are assigned. Nevertheless, those gifts could do this for him that everlasting glory will remain to him on earth while he himself is in heaven.

201. O'Kennedy ad viatorem. Si tibi contigerit praesens moriture sepulchrum quaerere quae vitae meta sit ecce tuae. Quid mihi profuerat virtus, quid inania mundi munera, quid nostrae fama vetusta domus. Scilicet haec tetricis cesserunt fatis. Si possint justum vincere vivum fata. Quare age et humanae soerna deliria vitae nostrae, simil precibus gaudeat umbratius.

Nicolaus Cowley, fabricavit. I.K. Spes me in Deo est.

To the traveller, if you who will presently die, should chance to ask the sepulchre what is the end of life? behold the end of mine. What did courage avail me? What the empty goods of the world? What the ancient fame of our house? Forsooth these have yielded to rough fate. If the fates can conquer the just man, therefore be up and doing, spurn the delirium of our human life, at the same time let thy spirit rejoice in prayer.

Nicolas Cowley is the sculptor. My hope is in God.
