LATTERAGH GRAVEYAED

This graveyard is situated less than a mile to the north east of the main Nenagh to Thurles road, about 8 miles from Nenagh.

County Library

It occupies the site of an important monastery founded by St. Cdhran, who is said to have died, probably from plague, in 548 A.D.

In the early Christian period there may have been up to 3,000 scholars at the monastery of Latteragh. St. Odhran is still remembered by his Holy Well, which is a short distance from Latteragh in Glanmore upper townland.

Recently three gravestones have been dug up in this graveyard. They have Crosses inscribed on them and have been dated to the 8th or 9th centuries A.D. This is the period when the monastery was flourishing. The ruins of the church probably date from the 12th century, when the monastery had gone into decline and Latteragh became a parish.

There was a Norman Settlement at Latteragh from the early 13th century.

In The stone castle nearly was owned by the De Marisco or Morres family.

The monument to Sir John Morres is weathered and rather difficult to read. According to Playfair, 1811, the full text should read: 'Here lieth the body of Sir John Morres of Knockagh, Baronet. Born the 29th day of August 1620, who died the 26th day of Cctober 1720 and the body of the Honorable Ellin Butler, Lady Morres, his wife, who died the 27th day of May 1721. For whom this monument was erected by Nicholas Morres, their son. Requiescant in Pace.

O'Sullivan Bere on his journey north from Glengariff in 1602/3 is said to have taken refuge in Latteragh church in January 1603, where he was attacked from the castle across the road.

The graveyard is in the modern parish of Templederry. It contains 57 inscribed headstones. All of them have been copied though in some the conventional religious texts have been omitted for brevity.
