THE PARISH OF TEMPLEDERRY GRAVEYARDS.

The parish of Templederry is situated in Upper Ormond about 10 miles S.E. of Nenagh, south of the main road from Nenagh to Borrisoleigh.

The Church of Ireland church was built by John Callin in 1828. It is surrounded by a graveyard which is in good condition. Not many of the headstones are very old, most of them being of the middle and later 1800's. There are a number of fragmented stones most of which were too damaged to get either a name or date. The oldest memorial in the graveyard is to a Mary Taylor who died in 1746 but there is one within the church to Thomas Otway who died in 1736.

Two of the headstones are unusual, one is to a Kitty Corbett who died in 1876 'a faithful and devoted servant of Rev. W.B. & E.M. Fry'. This is only the second headstone to a servant put up by their employers found in this whole survey. The memorial to Ellen O'Sullivan who died in 1918 and was for 47 years a teacher in her native parish was erected by her past pupils, also uncommon in this survey.

The church contains many flamboyant memorials to several generations of the Otway family of Castle Otway and there is a large vault beneath the church also belonging to the Otway family. There are 122 headstones, all have been copied. Where it has proved impossible to decipher part of a stone it is recorded thus -----. Where there is a doubt about an inscription, usually a date, it is recorded thus ?1840 ?1860, the more likely one being put first.

The modern graveyard at Templederry has not been transcribed, but the memorials to priests of the parish within and in the grounds of the R.C. church have been included.

Curreeny church was built in 1860. It contains a small graveyard all the headstones in it have been copied.
