115. His brief mission was distinguished by many services, many virtues, rare abilities and earnest piety to sooth the sore of heart. To make large the joy of the poor was the great aim of his pious labours. If he turned from this sphere for a brief, bright time, it was but to extend his benevolence to his country, to embrace her many sufferings within his comprehension charity and lend to her aid. The influence of those high attributes of mind and fervid purpose of heart which that country owned with pride and will remember with affectionate sorrow. His letters on landlordism in Tipperary will live and be cherished. They will ever be the proud mans scourge and the poor mans protection and the hitherto licensed vice of the great will shrink abashed from their kindling fervours. Death caught in his duties fulfillment and coming as the sanctifier of his life, struck him down young in years, but mature in learning, patriotism and virtue.
