NOTICE TO OWNERS OF DOGS.

SIGNS OF MADNESS IN DOGS.

Change of habits, restlessness, hiding in dark corners, gnawing and eating indigestible substances. Altered voice, uttering the peculiar noise in which the howl predominates. Surly, but not vicious; on the contrary often affectionate. Difficulty in swallowing, but showing no dread of water. Thick spittle hanging from the mouth, which the dog tries to remove with his paws. Frequently snapping.

Dogs showing any of these signs should be at once isolated and kept by themselves till a Veterinary Surgeon can be called in.

In the furious form, the first signs are followed by fits of excitement, with a tendency to attack other animals. The dog wanders, snapping at every animal he meets, until he drops and dies.

In dumb madness the lower jaw drops, rendering the dog unable to bark or bite. The dog remains quiet in some dark place, paralysis of the hind limbs soon sets in, followed by death.
