RULES FOR CONTRIBUTORS

1. Contributors are advised that it is editorial practice to refer major contributions to specialists in the relevant field.
2. Contributions must be typed and on one side only of a page. Preference will be given to those typed on A4 paper and in double-spacing. Every page should be numbered and margins of approx. 1 inch left at both sides. Last-minute changes should be made in a margin only, NOT in the text. Contributions in computer-disk form (accompanied by a print-out) are welcome, provided that the disk is Apple or Apple-convertible.
3. All contributions submitted must be final. Only typesetting and other minor errors may be made at proof stage. However, editorial advice is available on material submitted tentatively; but changes/revision requested must then be made by the contributor.
4. Contributors are asked to suggest possible illustrations. If illustrations are required to be returned, this should be made clear when they are first sent to the Editor. All editorial decisions regarding illustrations are final. Contributions accompanied by illustrations may get preference over others. Contributors are responsible for clearing copyright of illustrations, quotations, etc., and the Editor is not responsible for any fee or other charge for illustrations.
5. Because of the volume of material offered in recent years, and because of a widespread tendency by contributors to ignore deadlines, contributions are now being accepted on a "First Come, First Served" basis. Intending contributors who set their own deadlines and then fail to meet them risk being postponed to a later issue.
6. Only books with a substantial Tipperary content will normally be considered for review. Publishers are asked to appreciate that, once a book is given to a reviewer, the Editor has no effective control over the reviewer, whose sole responsibility it is to ensure that a review reaches the Editor in time for the next Journal. Academic geographers in particular are asked to bear in mind that to many Irish historians and publishers (but not, curiously, archaeologists) the concept of a deadline is alien.
7. Contributions should be sent to the Editor, Marcus Bourke, Co. Library, Thurles, Co. Tipperary.

Where to buy the Tipperary Historical Journal in Dublin.
